In the Summer of 2016, These 4 Native Students Looked Toward College. Here's Where They Are Now.

Chronicle of Higher Education – December 17, 2018

It's the day before homecoming at the University of Montana, and Charnelle Bear Medicine is feeling nervous. The Native American Student Association, of which she's secretary, has entered a float in the homecoming parade. But the group hasn't lined up a drummer, and someone just said the posters with the flags of Montana's tribes are too small to be seen by the crowd. Meanwhile, her 1-year-old daughter, Kaitlyn, keeps crawling out of the conference room where the association is meeting.
